Dear Madam / Sir,

A new computer ransomware called 'Locky' has been reported to be spreading through a wave of emails with attachments. The malware can lock computer files with an encryption program and demand a ransom for them to be unlocked. It is reported that a spam campaign showing links to fake dropbox sites is being used to spread Locky variants.

The message contains common subjects like "Please print", "Documents", "Photos", "Scans", "Images" and "pictures". However the subject may change in targeted spear phishing campaign.. The messages contain "zip" attachments that trick the computer into downloading the ransomware from 'greatesthits[dot]mygoldmusic[dot]com' (please do not visit this malicious website) to download variants of Locky ransomware,"

All users are advised to exercise caution while opening the mails. And do not open the above mentioned malicious website.

With regards
Nagendra Kumar
